Code of Conduct

The Forum on Internet Freedom in Africa (FIFAfrica) is an annual gathering of stakeholders from the internet governance and online rights arenas in Africa and beyond. Inaugurated in 2014, the Forum is a platform for stakeholders to deliberate on gaps, concerns and opportunities for advancing privacy, access to information, free expression, non-discrimination and the free flow of information online. Key to the event is the engagement on strategies to push back against surveillance, censorship, shutdowns and inequality in access and use of the internet.

Interactions at FIFAfrica include many different opinions and experiences hence it is essential to uphold respect and ensure comfortable participation for all attendees, staff and support personnel. Accordingly, harassment and disruption of any kind is not tolerated. We will take action in response to harassment related, but not limited, to national origin, gender, gender identity and expression, race, ethnicity, sexual orientation, physical characteristics, disability, religion, and age.

This code of conduct applies to Forum events and all Forum-related social events such as parties, gatherings at restaurants, bars and hotels. It also covers the conduct of participants on online platforms during the Forum. The Code of conduct is aimed at building a community that is free from intimidation, discrimination, or hostility by upholding dignity, decency, and respect among participants.

Participation at FIFAfrica and all related events and online platforms implies agreement to this code of conduct. All attendees, speakers, sponsors and volunteers at the Forum are required to adhere to this code of conduct. Failure to respect the code of conduct could result in expulsion from the event, law enforcement intervention and/or legal action in some circumstances. Further, the FIFAfrica organising team reserves the right to sanction offending individuals from attendance of all future Forums.

1. Guide to Communication
FIFAfrica is an international, multidisciplinary forum with complex and contested topics. The Forum draws participants that speak multiple languages and use terms from various fields of study. While English as well as French and Swahili will often be the medium of communication, differences in dialect, accent, and pronunciation will be common. Multilingualism will be encouraged at the Forum.

We encourage all participants to approach the Forum with open and positive attitudes, and to engage constructively and exercise empathy at all times. The following are the proposed communication guidelines:

- Speak clearly and at a moderate pace.
- Be an active listener, and be patient with participants who are speaking English as a second language.
- Avoid jargon and recognise that participants will not use the same terms and may not be familiar with some acronyms.
- Address ideas. Do not attack the contributor’s person.
- Disagreements will occur, it’s okay to walk away from a conversation that isn’t fruitful or is becoming tense.
- If you are not convinced by or hold a strong position against a solution and/or intervention by someone else, explain why, and propose an alternative.
● Remember that any group identity is complex and members are not homogenous.
● We recognise that insights by participants are shared on online platforms. However, some participants may not want their pictures and/or names shared on social media platforms. Upon commencement of an intervention, speakers should indicate their attribution requests.
